The Cost of War

A recent tabulation of federal expenses for 1920 shows what a tremendous burden war entails upon the people. Out of the taxes paid into the treasury, 98 per cent are either for purposes growing out of the recent war, or for protection against future wars. The big costs of war make it necessary to restrict the work of peace. It becomes necessary to cut down on all projects for developing the country. Work in the forest service, for public health, scientific agriculture, good roads, and many other enterprises needed for the wel fare of the people, has to be cut down owing to the heavy costs of war. It is the great prob lem of the future: how to avoid war. Sometimes avoiding war means national dishonor, which is worse than debts or taxes But it should be possible to find honorable ways by which war can be prevented.
